Words Matter
by Michelle Halberg, MCASE President

Recently my husband and I attended a community event in which the presenter was discussing his dislike of the word wilderness. From his perspective, the term implied the need to tame, conform or manage. He wondered aloud about the impact of exchanging the word nature for wilderness. He shared his hope that the word nature would bring about thoughts of awe, appreciation, reverence, respect. As he spoke the image I held with the word wilderness changed, my heart rate slowed and I felt peaceful.

Driving home, I began thinking about the words student— and special education student in particular. “Do these words also conjure thoughts of conformity, management and the need to tame?” I wondered, would exchanging the word child for student give us permission to let go of the limitations of our roles as teacher and student? Could we then instead be amazed at the diversity of these learners, explorers, and creators? If I were to say Autistic child versus a child with Autism, would it keep the emphasis on the child? I’d like to think that this simple change of word choice could help us influence our school environments and support a culture of acceptance, amazement, joy and maybe even a love of school.

Thank heavens it was a short ride home, as I could have continued to spin out of control! What if I said colleague instead of parent, administrator, or teacher? Could this influence how we approach decision making during special education meetings? Would everyone have a seat at the table and an equal voice no matter the role? What if....

In our roles as educational leaders, there are many things we can’t seem to predict, control, or plan. But we can choose our words—and words matter.

As you are aware, our society has become used to customization of products and services that meet individual needs. The use of technology has expanded this ability to communicate and customize for individuals. The expectations of individuals (community members and our kids) are that all products and services can be delivered with the essence of customization. Our schools across the nation were not built and developed to customize each individual situation, but rather to provide our children with the ability to think, evaluate, problem solve, and create a successful life for themselves and be a life-long learner (these are my bold assumptions of our system) in accomplishing this. Our educators, have not until recently, focused on the training required for a world requiring customization. Our public schools have been tremendously successful in developing an educated citizenry in the United States, but our new challenge is to transform the system of education to meet the expectations of customization. In Montana, we are well underway in creating this transformation, and all of us working together are recognizing the need for new training and strategies for personalizing learning, where the standards for achievement are held constant and the former constants – time, place, delivery – are variables. This system transformation and training of educators will be key to the success of our public school system into the future. The “why” of making this transformation is the driving force in developing the “how” to make it happen. I believe Montana is in an outstanding place to be able to make this happen.

The first step in making that happen (the “How”), in my mind, is to vividly describe for your community, all that you provide for the children in your schools. Part of that description must include how incredibly valuable the education of our children is to the future success of our community, state and nation, is not left to the expertise of anyone other than those in your very school who work day in and day out to make this happen. To do this you must enlist the energy, enthusiasm, and expertise of your entire school team. I suggest, that as school leaders, you can influence this transformation and gain the trust of your community by making sure that everyone who works in your environment (everyone – board members, administrators, teachers, paras, custodians, food service workers, bus drivers, and all support volunteers), knows the “bold story” of what your team is accomplishing for students. Then, charge your team (all of them) with making sure they can tell this bold story to anyone they encounter – friends, neighbors, in the grocery check-out line, in the hardware store and coffee shop. In my experience in five Montana school districts of varying size, from east to west, this common strategy that appears to be absolutely critical to the success of all endeavors ... effective community engagement to be sure your community understands the value of its schools! The strategies involved in effective communication with your community are necessary in order to build the trust of your community. We need to be persistent in telling the story that you are the educators, the experts for providing educational services, that meet the needs of the students in your community. This trust, once built and established over time, will develop the partnership for learning that great schools have with their community, parents, businesses, interested individuals, retirees, nay-sayers, and the whole crew!

concept of your team educating the community about your schools’ successes and challenges, does in fact build trust with your community.

Please use the resources available to you to assist in implementing the thoughts I have outlined. Recently GREAT 2019 (Great Work of Montana’s Public Schools, volume VII), describing a comprehensive vision for the future success of Montana’s public schools and establishing a clear road map to achieve this vision, was released (by the MT-PEC partners) for your use as a template you can use to tell your school story. Those who attended MCESL and heard keynote speaker and award-winning champion of public education, Jamie Vollmer, learned about strategies for engaging your community and telling the great story about your school. Expect to see more information about your access to those strategies in the coming month. Please use these resources as you plan your future community engagement strategies.

The MT-PEC partners collaborated to develop a unified professional development series for school district governance teams on key topics related to funding, flexibility, efficiency, safety and security, community ownership and local control. The goal is to ensure a broad and common understanding of the full extent of the obligations and authority granted to Montana’s public schools and to contribute to a body of knowledge that will enhance our ability to develop the full potential of each child in every public school in Montana. Please use these resources as you tell your story in your community.

Thanks for your work to help engage your community in the great work you are doing in your schools! You can see from my perspective, your success in gaining the trust of your community is the real difference maker in accomplishing what you intend to make happen in educating the students in your community. Best to you in the days ahead!

Cybersecurity

The Consortium for School Networking (CoSN) and its state affiliate chapter, Montana Educational Technologists Association (META) are pleased to continue to support the work of current and aspiring superintendents and district leadership teams in leading all aspects of digital learning transformations.

Last month we focused on five critical guidelines for ensuring student data privacy when leveraging technology to maximize student learning. This month we turn our attention to larger and even more encompassing issue of cybersecurity.

In today’s world it seems there is not a week that goes by without a news story related to some sort of breach insecurity for one organization or another. As school districts rely more and more on digital tools for data records, instruction, and many other facets of school or district operations, it is incumbent upon school leaders to understand the issues around cybersecurity and take appropriate actions to prevent any sort of breach within school data systems. CoSN is pleased to support school leaders in communicating the urgency around cybersecurity by providing a brief overview of the top five reasons why schools and districts must make cybersecurity a priority.

CoSN, in partnership with edWeb.net, hosts The Empowered Superintendent monthly webinar series on topics that are essential for all educators engaged in leading digital transformations. School superintendents serve as panelists on each webinar and share their stories and expertise. The focus of the November 11, 2019, webinar (3:00 pm MT) is on cybersecurity. Learn more and register for this free webinar as well as access recordings of previously broadcast webinars at https://home.edweb.net/supers/.

If your school or district would like more information about joining CoSN or getting more involved with CoSN, please contact Brian Calvary, CAE, CoSN Director of Membership and Chapters, at bcalvary@cosn.org.

Release of GREAT 2019

The MT-PEC partners have worked together to prepare GREAT 2019 - The Great Work of Montana's Public Schools, Volume VII, released at MCEL in October. School board members and school superintendents will be receiving a hard copy of this great tool in the mail in the near future. You can always print a usable copy from the link provided. Our hope is that you will use this publication to engage your community in the story about the great opportunities your schools provide for the students in your community. Now is a great time to tell your story of the rich and engaging environment your school provides for your community!

GotZoom: As you may already know, student loan debt can be a terrific financial burden. To help alleviate this burden, SAM-School Administrators of Montana, would like to introduce you to our newest member benefit. GotZoom. They specialize in securing student loan subsidies for their clients as well as successfully enrolling them in loan forgiveness programs. During the past 7 years, GotZoom’s expertise has reduced the monthly student loan payments for their clients by an average of 65% as well as the total payout over the life of the loan by 75%. This is a tool that could be used to enhance your recruiting and retention efforts.
