Mountain States Regional Leadership Conference 5
"DESIGN THINKING"
Deadwood, SD
November 12-14, 2017

DESIGN THINKING

Has your current thinking about leadership and organizational problem solving become tired? If so, it is time to embrace a new way of solving those complex and challenging issues that you face on a daily basis. How about working collaboratively with teachers using a hands-on, innovative approach that will lead to results and sustainability? Design Thinking Methodology has been used by such companies as Apple and Google to create products and services that are relevant to the consumer. The same principles of Design Thinking Methodology can be used in education. Come learn how you can apply Design Thinking to your work. Work with colleagues to identify a true problem of practice, structure a solution based on the needs of those who will be the users of your solution and create innovative ideas for how to solve the challenge. Design thinking works and it gives you a chance to learn from a variety of perspectives, some that you may not have considered before. Design Thinking is proving to be a great tool for teachers also, so bring them along and save.

Monday is dedicated to Design Thinking with Sunday and Tuesday bringing a massive update on technology from TIE folks around their new four state computer science/coding initiative along with a presentation by Darren Ellwein, Digital Principal of the Year from Harrisburg, SD.

We will also have folks from ACT in to give everyone a close look at new developments in this assessment arena.

This, our 5th annual Mountain States Regional Leadership Conference, is designed to be relevant for educators and leaders at all levels, so plan to bring your team and save.
