Jason Markey, a Bammy Educators Voice Award winner will be 'turning your thinking into action'

Turning Thinking Into Action

For those of you who attended MS5, Jason will take you from Design Thinking into action with next steps when you return to your school. If you were unlucky and couldn't get to #5, Jason will give you a quick down and dirty look at the Design process and then lead you to your next steps.

Jason Markey was named principal at East Leyden High School starting in the 2012-13 school year after previously serving the district both as an assistant principal and as a social studies teacher. Jason helped lead a district initiative to move the Leyden School District to 1:1, with every student issued a Google Chromebook. In 2012 Jason became a Google Certified Teacher with the goal of continuing his own growth as a learner first. Additionally, Jason was named a 2014 Digital Principal of the Year by NASSP and was awarded the Bammy Educator's Voice Award for Secondary School Principal. Jason believes strongly in the power of the web as a social connector and continuously looks for opportunities to learn from and collaborate with others.

Additionally, Jason has partnered with Google, Digital Promise, and EdtechTeam as part of the Dynamic Learning Project aimed at closing the digital-divide in our schools.
